

What Parents Told Us About RSE

Thank you to everyone who took the time to complete our survey. We were delighted by the positive feedback and the strong support shown for Relationships Education across our school.

Parents overwhelmingly told us that they:

- Support Relationships Education in school.
- Recognise its importance in keeping children safe.
- Value an inclusive approach that reflects the diverse world we live in.
- Feel confident talking to their children about relationships and related topics.

This feedback shows a high level of trust in both the curriculum and the school's approach to teaching Relationships Education.

While parents are very supportive of Relationships Education, some said they would welcome more information about:

- What is being taught in each year group.
- When lessons will take place.
- Resources and guidance to help continue discussions at home.

This tells us that parents want to be more informed and involved in their children's learning, which is something we value and want to support.

Responses showed a range of views about attending parent workshops. Some families would be keen to attend, while others would prefer information to be shared in different ways. We will consider a variety of approaches to ensure information is accessible for everyone.

Most parents were not particularly concerned about withdrawal rights, suggesting that families generally feel comfortable with and supportive of the curriculum being delivered.

The survey highlights strong parental support for Relationships Education. Parents see it as an important part of helping children develop healthy relationships, understand the world around them and stay safe. The key message from families is that they would like more communication about what is being taught and how they can support learning at home. In response, we will continue to share information through our curriculum materials, information on the website, knowledge organisers, updates on the newsletter and through letters for specific content.